Pretrial Diversion Program	)

In many cases defendants who are accepted into the pretrial diversion program operated by the United States Attorney have previously signed appearance bonds which restrict their travel. Occasionally a defendant finds it necessary, for personal or business reasons, to travel outside the limits so imposed. This requires permission of the court in advance, and the defendant must provide the court with information as to departure and arrival dates, and addresses where he/she can be located. Because an individual participating in the diversion program maintains regular contact with a probation officer, it is therefore,

ORDERED that any defendant who has been released on bond by the undersigned, and who thereafter is accepted into and is participating in the pretrial diversion program, may thereafter travel outside the limits specified in the appearance bond to the extent authorized in advance by the

by the U. S. Probation Officer assigned to his or her case. Such defendant need not secure approval by the court, notwithstanding the terms of the appearance bond. A failure to comply with the directions of the Probation Officer, however, shall be deemed a violation of the bond.

The pretrial diversion coordinator in the office of the United States Attorney is authorized to so advise each defendant at the time he or she is accepted into the diversion program.
