

Sponsored by the U.S. District Court, Western District of Washington and the Seattle University School of Law

You will never experience anything like the iCivics Institute. It will touch you on every level – personally, emotionally, and professionally. Don't miss this opportunity! Beverly Zanetti, Washington Middle School, Seattle.

The iCivics Institute gave me such a wealth of information and knowledge about the courts, but my middle school students will really appreciate how this digital toolbox has helped me make civics lessons more fun and interesting. But make no mistake, this is serious, deep learning! Middle School Teacher.

The iCivics Institute provides an invaluable experience for civics educators. It is well organized, highly engaging, and full of learning resources that enhance teaching and provide excellent learning opportunities for students. Carrie Zamberlin, Cedar Heights Junior High, Port Orchard.

We teach about the foundations of our government and what makes America special, but it is here in the judicial branch that those freedoms are protected and that law concerning those freedoms is interpreted. It is so easy to become cynical about the law, but what I saw was great compassion and balance from those who make these far reaching decisions. Middle School Teacher.

The U.S. District Court for the Western District of Washington in collaboration with the Seattle University School of Law is offering middle and junior high school teachers a unique opportunity to become proficient with using the free iCivics curriculum in the classroom. The program launched by Justice Sandra Day O'Connor is built around computer games that teach important civic content while students have fun. See www.iCivics.org.

This 3-day institute will help teachers become proficient in the games and lesson plans, as well as learn more in-depth content on the federal judiciary, Constitution, branches of government, and civil rights. Judges who hear the cases you read about in the news, with long-term law-related education expert Margaret Fisher, will prepare you to implement the iCivics lessons immediately in the classroom.
